I have a mer

urgent doctor care.

My mother is going to accompany my visit --- 100% --- even if I must get completely nude.

The doctor assigned to my Humana Primary Care apparently only is in the office on Mondays.

So, the person on the phone said that I had to be in by 11am --- obviously that was not going to happen.

So I have an opening of a window for 2 hours.

Scheduling UBER now.

People are strange when you're a stranger
Faces look ugly when you're alone
Women seem wicked when you're unwanted
Streets are uneven when you're down

When you're strange
Faces come out of the rain
When you're strange
No one remembers your name
When you're strange
When you're strange
When you're strange

People are strange when you're a stranger
Faces look ugly when you're alone

Honesty

Song by Billy Joel

If you search for tenderness
It isn't hard to find
You can have the love you need to live
But if you look for truthfulness
You might just as well be blind
It always seems to be so hard to give

Honesty is such a lonely word
Everyone is so untrue
Honesty is hardly ever heard
And mostly what I need from you

I can always find someone
To say they sympathize
If I wear my heart out on my sleeve
But I don't want some pretty face
To tell me pretty lies
All I want is someone to believe

Honesty is such a lonely word
Everyone is so untrue
Honesty is hardly ever heard
And mostly what I need from you

I can find a lover
I can find a friend
I can have security until the bitter end
Anyone can comfort me
With promises again
I know, I know

When I'm deep inside of me
Don't be too concerned
I won't ask for nothin' while I'm gone
But when I want sincerity
Tell me where else can I turn
'Cause you're the one I depend upon

Honesty is such a lonely word
Everyone is so untrue
Honesty is hardly ever heard
And mostly what I need from you

Rev 3A - This short ebook describes the leaders of the gangstalking program against Targeted Individuals in the United States. Their names are David J. Glawe and Brian two criminals, due to the brave efforts of police whistleblowers. During 2018, there were 3 police whistleblowers that stated the Fusion Centers were being used as Gangst Analysis Office of DHS provides funding, training, free software, database and contact lists, and some of the key personnel for the Fusion Centers in the United States. I & Centers and works with the Emergency 911 Call Centers in the United States, to block and redirect the emergency calls of Targeted Individuals. Many Targeted Individuals making a 911 emergency call and no ambulance arrives, or police arrive and mock you.

In my opinion, Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen and President Trump do not know about the criminal conduct in the DHS Intelligence & Analysis Office. Organizational charts, research are suggested for readers. Targeted Individuals are encouraged to write or call the DHS Secretary and FBI agents - and tell them what is happening. Try to use di appears that the Office of the DNI and FBI's Counterterrorism Unit are also directly involved. Write to your Senators and Congressmen. Talk to your State legislators. Em Doctors. I have provided a long list of contacts at the DHS – please contact them, or if you are in the Washington DC area, please hand-deliver messages and leave flyers o

In my opinion, Glawe and Murphy have committed acts of High Treason against United States citizens. Under the U.S. Constitution and Federal Law, a judge can deliver officials and each of the employees in the DHS Intelligence and Analysis Office. A lifetime sentence in prison, without parole, is also a possibility for them.

The last know address for David J. Glawe is 2912 S Grant St, Arlington, VA 22202.

Please print this document for distribution – the government criminals are tracking it electronically.

What we have is an underdevelopment of civil society resources.

Abstract

In tests for a psychokinetic (PK) effect upon the placement of moving cubes, groups of objects with different degrees of surface roughness were acting as his own subject, "willed" them to come to rest in the target half of the table. In one series the use of smooth and medium-rough cubes ; statistically significant difference was found between smooth and very rough cubes. The results are evaluated in terms of the equivalent physica and the psychological factors involved. (PsycINFO Database Record (c) 2017 APA, all rights reserved)

H. Bösch, F. Steinkamp, and E. Boller's (see record 2006-08436-001) review of the evidence for psychokinesis confirms many of the authors' earlier findings. The authors' existing studies provide statistical evidence for psychokinesis, that the evidence is generally of high methodological quality, and that effect sizes are distributed heterogeneously. The authors postulated the heterogeneity is attributable to selective reporting and thus that psychokinesis is "not proven." However, Bösch et al. assumed that effect size is entirely independent of the number of experiments. For these experiments, this assumption is incorrect; it also guarantees heterogeneity. The authors maintain that selective reporting is an implausible explanation for the results. These studies provide evidence for a genuine psychokinetic effect. Study showing that humans have some psychic powers caps Daryl Bem's career

By George Lowery | December 6, 2010

Bem

It took eight years and nine experiments with more 1,000 participants, but the results offer evidence that humans have some ability to anticipate the future.

"Of the various forms of ESP or psi, as we call it, precognition has always most intrigued me because it's the most magical," said Daryl Bem, professor of psychology emeritus, whose study will be published in the American Psychological Association's Journal of Personality and Social Psychology sometime next year.

"It most violates our notion of how the physical world works. The phenomena of modern quantum physics are just as mind-boggling, but they are so technical that most non-physicists don't know about them," said Bem, who studied physics before becoming a psychologist.

Publishing on this topic has gladdened the hearts of psi researchers but stumped doubting social psychologists, who cannot fault Bem's mainstream and widely accepted methodology. Bem became interested in the scientific study of psi (unexplained processes of information or energy transfer) when he was asked to find methodological flaws in one psi researcher's successful extrasensory perception studies -- and couldn't.

"The research and this article are specifically targeted to my fellow social psychologists," Bem said. "I designed the experiments to be persuasive, simple and transparent enough to encourage them to try replicating these experiments for themselves." Bem's innovation in the experiments reported in the article was to "take well-known phenomena in psychology and reverse their time course."

Rather than present a stimulus and measure a subject's response, Bem measured the subject's response before the stimulus was presented. In some earlier experiments by other psi researchers, participants were hooked up to physiological measuring equipment similar to a lie detector that measured emotional arousal. They sat before a computer and watched randomly selected images; some were erotic or very negative ("like the bloody photos you see on CSI") images.

"Your physiology jumps when you see one of those pictures after watching a series of landscapes or neutral pictures," Bem said. "But the remarkable finding is that your physiology jumps before the provocative picture actually appears on the screen -- even before the computer decides which picture to show you. What it shows is that your physiology can anticipate an upcoming event even though your conscious self might not."

Bem's nine experiments demonstrated similar unconscious influences from future events. For example, in one experiment, participants saw a list of words and were then given a test in which they tried to retype as many of the words as they could remember. Next, a computer randomly selected some of the words from the list and gave the participants practice exercises on them. When their earlier memory test results were checked, it was found that they had remembered more of the words they were to practice later than words they were not going to practice. In other words, the practice exercises had reached back in time to help them on the earlier test.

All but one of the nine experiments confirmed the hypothesis that psi exists. The odds against the combined results being due to chance or statistical flukes are about 74 billion to 1, according to Bem.

Throughout his career Bem has taken paths less traveled. In 1994 he co-authored a series of experiments on telepathy published in another APA journal, the Psychological Bulletin. "In my work, I have always pursued problems or puzzles that strike me as interesting and have not worried about how it might affect my career. I have a maverick approach to many psychological topics, and I consider myself fortunate that Cornell has always given me the freedom to do that."

Bem, who came to Cornell in 1978 and retired in 2007, said it is unusual for him to work on one topic for eight years, "but this one was a biggie and seemed like an appropriate thing to end my career with. The journal in which it will appear is the same journal that published my very first article 50 years ago."

Bem said he conducted the experiments because he believed that existing research strongly implied that precognition is real. "I went in optimistic that I would be able to find it with these experiments," he said. "After I started getting positive results, my undergraduate research team seemed puzzled by my enthusiasm and said, 'But didn't you tell us you thought these would work?'"

"I said yes, but when I actually see them work, that's very different."

I am taking the lead stepping forward as a community leader in a need to return an ideal into perspectives.

Gangstalking

As these mothers fight for justice, they're also opening themselves up to online attacks and even hacking

How far would you go to seek justice if you believed your loved one's death was never properly investigated?

Stacks of folders, binders, and papers surround Michele Barton, forming a symbolic fortress where she has remained captive for nearly a decade. Barton sat amid her carefully organized paperwork during our recent meeting at a Hurst coffee shop, where she revealed a bizarre story of the harassment she has endured since the untimely death of her son, Tanner Barton, in 2012. She spread out the paperwork on a large wooden table after unpacking a rolling suitcase and two backpacks stuffed with documents.

We weren't there to discuss the details of Tanner's case and the investigations and theories that have blazed across the national media and social media for years. We talked about a story that until now has remained untold: the harassment of families who have lost loved ones under suspicious or unusual circumstances.

Most people probably cannot fathom how online trolls or people on apparent power trips could savagely attack Barton and other grieving families, but what these victims have experienced has a name. It's called "gangstalking": harassment that centers on a group effort to surveil, attack, discredit, and silence a target, sometimes to the point of destroying his or her life.

When Barton spoke out on Facebook and Twitter about her son's death, she found something that surprised her. Other families came forward and told her they have experienced the same types of attacks. They, too, were stalked and discredited for disagreeing with the official theories and conclusions of police and other experts.

Some of the disputes and quests for truth have raged on for years, even decades. Barton and another woman seeking answers in the deaths of their family members were hit with protective orders for comments they wrote on social media. Court papers related to their cases listed no examples of severe, violent threats. Another associate of Barton's claims she was harassed so relentlessly over her daughter's death she had to move out of state.

But who are the real gangstalkers here? That depends on which side you ask.

Barton's gangstalking story touches a national network of high-profile true crime experts, podcasters, bloggers, and law enforcement officials who heavily influenced public discussions and perceptions about Tanner's case. Some of them aggressively tried to silence Barton for her blistering criticism of their work and her refusal to accept the official narratives about how her son died.

On April 22, 2012, Tanner, a 19-year-old star football player at Marion University in Indianapolis, collapsed at a party at a friend's home in Howard County, Indiana. Why immediate aid was not given to him is still a mystery, but Tanner was left lying on the floor for nearly six hours before anyone called for help or realized he was dead, according to reports. In a witness statement to the Howard County sheriff's department, a youth who lived at the home told a detective she saw Tanner stumble as he walked toward a flight of stairs the night he died. Instead of making it up the first step, he allegedly spun around, made a strange noise, and collapsed, the report states.

Initially, the youth thought Tanner was joking around. She later told a sheriff's detective that she took his pulse. Figuring he had passed out, she left him lying on the floor. She then reportedly fell asleep on a couch. College-aged friends at the gathering were drinking that night, but toxicology tests showed Tanner was not intoxicated.

In her search for answers, Barton publicly sounded off about a veterinarian who was at the friend's home the evening Tanner died. She questioned whether he knew more about what had happened that night than he was letting on. Years earlier, the vet made headlines for his highly publicized addiction to Ketamine, an animal medication. Because of that, Barton demanded toxicology tests specifically for the drug.

Later, investigators said it was tested, even though official reports did not list Ketamine by name. Barton's pursuit of the Ketamine angle eventually led the vet to obtain a temporary protective order against her in 2015. Court papers linked the restraining order to a series of text messages Barton had sent him and other comments she made online. None of the comments contained threats, Barton said. That seemed to be the case in the text messages she showed me. In yet another strange twist, legal documents showed that Barton never received proper notice of the hearing for the restraining order. The restraining order has since expired.

The vet later wrote in an anonymous statement on The Dr. Oz Show website that everyone was in shock that day and was trying to locate a phone number for Tanner's parents. He also said he would never have done anything to hurt Tanner, who was his son's best friend. The veterinarian was never charged with a crime, nor was anyone else.

Barton said that overall, she believes there was a complete lack of accountability for her son's death as well as the lack of a thorough and aggressive police investigation.

Conflicting theories, the toxicology reports, and a change in Tanner's cause of death added to her suspicions that something was very wrong. Initially, Tanner's COD was ruled as natural. In 2018, it was changed to "accidental," due to positional asphyxia. In other words, after he collapsed, his position cut off his ability to breathe.

"It's still a highly suspicious theory," Barton said. "There's no rhyme or reason to it. It's absolutely asinine."

Still seeking answers, Barton started Tanner's Voice in 2015, a Facebook page that grew into a website.

"I was fighting for three years, and nobody would help me," Barton said. "And then I got the idea for Tanner's Voice."

Barton's social media outreach led to interview requests from podcasts, TV stations, and radio shows. Tanner's story went viral, capturing the interest of high-profile personalities in the world of true crime news. In 2017, Barton landed a spot on a podcast by Nancy Grace, a well-known true crime journalist and attorney. Around the same time, Tanner's case was picked up by the Cold Case Investigative Research Institute (CCIRI) in Atlanta, Georgia, a nonprofit institute founded by Sheryl McCollum, a college professor, crime scene investigator, and writer who works for a suburban Atlanta police force.

Early on, findings from the institute indicated that for six years, law enforcement failed to obtain "phone records, a polygraph, data from Tanner's phone, tissue testing, a 911 call analysis, a timeline of events, a comparison of written statements to phone records, and interview friends who saw Tanner the night he died."

In 2018, Laura Pettler, a forensic criminologist and owner of a private investigative firm, asked Barton to appear with her on The Dr. Oz Show, a nationally syndicated TV show featuring the titular physician. Pettler, the owner of Laura Pettler & Associates Death Investigations (LPA) in North Carolina, is a regular commentator for Dr. Oz. She is also a close professional colleague of McCollum's.

All of it seemed like an amazing breakthrough, Barton said. Finally, a dream team was working pro bono to find answers about Tanner's death. Leigh Egan, a writer for Grace's Crime Online website (Crimeonline.com), also weighed in on the case, along with bloggers and activists from Websleuths, a popular online discussion forum for crimes and missing persons. In the end, everything led to more feelings of grief for Barton.

In late March 2018, a well-known podcaster in Canada spoke on a Canadian television program about Tanner's case with information provided by Barton. Three days later, Pettler and McCollum contacted Barton and indicated they were angry that details of their investigations were publicly aired without their input. In writing, Pettler and McCollum both ended their involvement with Tanner's case.

"All of a sudden, everyone turned on me," Barton said.

A screenshot of a message from CCIRI, provided by Barton, states, "We have to talk today. The Institute does not work this way. We don't take credit — we don't tell people the evidence we have — we don't leave others out when we do an interview — Dr. Laura Pettler ... [is] not happy — you now know Tanner's case is not a homicide — you know it's at most failure to render aid and obstruction — at the most — the truth is important to help other families. I agree with you this case [should] never have taken six years, but it's not a conspiracy, cover-up, or a murder."

In a March 29, 2018 letter written on her firm's letterhead, Pettler blasted Barton for her social media posts and statements she made on podcasts. "When you share confidential information and post things about police not doing their jobs or conspiracy theories, it is not good for Tanner's case," she wrote. "Again, please stop posting all accusations of this nature on social media or discussing confidential information with your podcasters.

"Due to all of the above," Pettler continued, "LPA has closed this case."

About a month later, the Howard County sheriff's department — six years after Tanner died — suddenly announced on social media that it had closed its investigation, based partly on findings by Pettler and McCollum. No evidence was found to indicate foul play or that Tanner was murdered, the release stated.

Egan, the Crime Online writer, reiterated the sheriff's press release and made a note of Pettler's and McCollum's work on the case.

The battle with Barton was far from over, though.

A Facebook post from CCIRI on April 24, 2018 read, in part, that the CCIRI, LPA, and Crimeonline.com writer Egan all determined that "no prosecutable crime was committed against Tanner Barton."

It also stated that the case used extensive "time and talents from CCIRI, LPA, Nancy Grace, Dr. Oz, FBI, Peter Hyatt, Sheryl McCollum, Leigh Egan, numerous podcasters, and other media."

In addition to the sheriff's department, the county coroner's and prosecutor's offices also investigated.

"All of these resources could have been spent on an authentic cold case," the post stated.

In other words, Barton was told she wasted their time.

The timing of it all, Barton said, especially so close to the anniversary date of her son's death, left her feeling devastated. The married mother of a young woman had to back off her activism on Tanner's case for a couple of months.

"It killed me, my husband, and my daughter," Barton said. "And I had to recoup to get my feet back under me. Then I really started speaking out.

"I trusted these people," she continued. "I trusted everybody to do what they needed to do and not hide just because they had connections."

Numerous photos of Barton and her son hugging and laughing together offer a snapshot of how close they were. A kind-hearted person, Tanner liked to send Bible verses to people on Facebook and Twitter when he saw they were going through a difficult time, Barton said. He also loved to sing and play the guitar. Barton affectionately called him "Bub."

When Barton started airing her grievances on Facebook, a Georgia woman, Phyllis Cook, quickly picked up on the posts and agreed with Barton that she was allegedly "wronged" by the investigators. Their Facebook rants led McCollum to secure restraining orders against both Barton and Cook. Using the words "vile" and "unethical," Barton additionally claimed she was trying to protect other families from going through what she had experienced.

Because of their comments on social media, Barton and Cook were both hauled into the Superior Court for Fulton County in Georgia on the same day, November 13, 2018. Court papers for both women have the heading "Family Violence," although it's not clear why. Barton's papers were signed by Justice Alex Manning, who has also served as an "expert" with CCIRI, according to social media posts.

McCollum's protective order alleged that Barton was making incessant, slanderous remarks about her on social media. McCollum wrote that Barton stalked her by "attacking CCIRI and me as director on social media. [Barton] has slandered me and CCIRI incessantly on social media and posted lies and disparaging remarks about CCIRI and me."

Further, McCollum claimed that she received a message that Barton teamed up with another person to "bring" her "down," court papers state.

McCollum wrote that Barton "has accused me of hacking into her phone and computer. [Barton] and Phyllis Cook post each other's slanderous posts."

The papers also claim that Barton and Cook both made "numerous, slanderous statements about experts in the CCIRI: Dr. Laura Pettler and Leigh Egan."

A packet of social media comments provided by Barton did not include any threats. Whether additional comments exist is unknown because Pettler declined to be interviewed and McCollum did not respond to repeated attempts to contact her.

Cook has her own story of grief and unanswered questions. The 72-year-old has spent most of her adult life — more than 50 years — investigating what she believes was the murder of her father and brother at the hands of the notorious Dixie Mafia in Mississippi. Both of them died from gunshot wounds to the head.

Her younger brother, Ronnie Anderson, died in 1967. Her father, Dan Anderson, a deputy with a Mississippi sheriff's department, "got in over his head" with the Dixie Mafia, Cook said. He died in 2002. Although police investigations determined both deaths were suicides, Cook never believed them.

Cook knew Barton through different online forums and support groups. They connected on Facebook. Cook had also reached out to McCollum's CCIRI and was also overjoyed that someone with clout would finally hear her story, but when things started going sour, Cook alleges that she was ordered to distance herself from Barton. If not, Cook was allegedly told, her case would be dropped, too.

"I was so desperate, and they were the first ones in a legal sense who were going to help me," Cook said. "I blocked [Barton], but then I realized I cannot revictimize a grieving family. And after that, it was like a pit bull on a cat."

Barton and Cook vehemently deny stalking or threatening McCollum.

McCollum, Cook said, "lied about me stalking her. She lied about my continuing whatever [Barton] is or is not doing."

Cook also said that conversations with Barton about their electronic devices being hacked were taking place during private phone calls, not openly on social media.

"I did not stalk" McCollum, Cook said. "I did not drive by the police station, and I did not threaten her or her kids."

The court appearance cost both women thousands of dollars. Barton spent $1,500 on an attorney, plus another $500 on travel expenses. After it was over, the attorney sent her an additional bill for nearly $3,000. Cook spent $2,500 for an attorney and a stressful trip to the courthouse for "something I didn't do," she said.

"I have never seen a more vindictive group of people," Cook said.

Levi Page, host of the Crime and Scandal podcast, came to McCollum's defense on Facebook, saying she did not deserve to be treated like this. Page agreed to talk to me but only off the record. He admitted to writing a public post on Facebook that told Cook to back off. The post also mentioned the prior arrest record of one of Cook's family members.

"It was done to embarrass me," Cook said.

But Page said it was fair game because it's a public record. In the past, he interviewed Cook about her story.

When asked about the validity of using a restraining order for social media posts, Chief Judge Robert C.I. McBurney of Superior Court of Fulton County issued the following statement via email: "In this day and age, it is not uncommon for stalking incidents and harassing communications to involve social media. If, in the magistrate's reasoned judgment, the complained-of conduct met the statutory requirements for the issuance of a protective order, the magistrate should have issued the order. Here, the petitioner alleged, among other things, that the respondent's conduct was harassing and intimidating and that respondent had threatened the petitioner.

"That some of these communications occurred via social media is neither remarkable nor disqualifying," he continued. "Moreover, the magistrate likely received oral testimony from the petitioner before issuing the temporary protective order. This would have contained additional information about the situation."

But not everyone believes restraining orders should be used to police comments on social media. Daxton "Chip" Stewart, a professor and First Amendment expert at TCU, agreed to talk to me about the concept of restricting free speech with restraining orders. His comments were not specifically about Cook's and Barton's cases.

"It's very difficult for courts to issue restraining orders about speech, even libelous or highly critical speech," Stewart said. "The First Amendment, if it says anything, says that the government can't issue gag orders or bans on speech.

"Name-calling that's not accusing someone of a crime — mere rhetorical hyperbole or calling someone the craziest person I've ever seen — these are not valid subjects for a lawsuit," he continued. "You can bring those cases, but they'll get dismissed."

Even if false criminal accusations are made, "you can't get a restraining order that says you can't talk about me doing crime, anymore," Stewart said.

The appropriate legal venue is a civil lawsuit, something that often requires ample time and money.

"But that is the proper venue," he said.

Court actions to silence someone is feasible only in the most extreme cases, Stewart added. That might include comments that could ruin a criminal case or violent threats that place people in imminent danger, for example.

But the attack against Barton did not end with the restraining order. It continued with a website that emerged with its first post in May 2019. Justiceiscoming.co is registered to Pettler and features posts that reference Barton directly and apparently indirectly. Articles from the website were also re-posted to the Facebook page for Pettler's investigative firm.

Nick Fuller, a spokesman for the website-hosting platform GoDaddy, said anyone who registers a domain with the company agrees that all information used to create the account is accurate, current, and complete. If invalid or illegitimate information is submitted, GoDaddy has the ability to revoke and/or delete the domain name, Fuller stated in an email.

"If someone feels this is a form of harassment," he added, "we also recommend they contact local law enforcement."

Although attempts were made to silence Barton, Justiceiscoming.co holds little back about her. After the protective order expired, Barton wrote on Facebook on May 3, 2019, "I guess being Tanner's Voice scares some people! ... In 2018, I refused to believe the ridiculous theory that the media proposed to [the Howard County sheriff's department] in regards to how they theorized Tanner's death. A 'theory' with no new physical evidence. And because I spoke out and publicly challenged the theory, 'false charges' were filed against me and a protective order served by a corrupt court! The lengths both of these individuals have gone to shut me up is criminal! See a pattern? When you speak out against liars and corruption, their only resolve is to use their 'connected resources' against you!"

Playing off of the names of Barton's campaigns for her son, "Tanner's Voice" and "Justice for Tanner," one of the posts on Justiceiscoming.co is called "Michele's Voice." It reads, in part, that "Tanner Barton's voice did not then, nor does it now, scare people. Tanner Barton's name was never associated with chronic social media stalking behaviors. ... Tanner Barton's words did not land him three protective orders for three victims across two states.

So, who's voice is this again? #MichelesVoice #JusticeIsHere"

The references to the restraining orders are in connection with the veterinarian, McCollum, and a non-related case of someone who was allegedly stalking Barton and filed counter charges against her after he was arrested and received a one-year prison sentence, Barton said.

Other posts talk about being "duped" and people who have Munchausen syndrome, the taking on of an illness or a victimhood mentality to gain attention, sympathy, money, fame, or some other special kind of treatment. A post titled "I Got Duped" says that Barton's posts "over the past year have taught us when [Barton] reads something against her manipulative, attention-seeking narrative, she will extract one or more little pieces, twist it or them factually and in context, then repost just those little pieces with inflammatory, accusatory, defamatory, libelous rhetoric in social posts."

Barton brought her story to light at this time because she continues to experience what she calls weird and frightening attacks. Documents show that her phone, Facebook account, and email have been hijacked. Phone calls were coming in with the "name" 666, screenshots show. At one point, Barton saw a man parked in a dark car in the cul-de-sac near her home. The man appeared to be working on a computer and had a camera and other equipment on the dashboard, Barton said.

"He pointed at me and started laughing," she said.

She also showed me a message sent to her by a supporter of the true crime media personalities. The post has a smiling cartoon camera icon with the caption "the deadliest weapon." When the icon is clicked, it opens her phone camera. Then a button appears that says "click here" to send a picture to the person who sent the video.

Barton further claims that all of the data from her phone was uploaded without her permission to an online cloud account that she cannot access. In August 2019, she began receiving a subscription to Outside magazine, which is addressed to Tanner, even though he never lived at the Barton's current address. The company who sent the magazine could not tell her who bought it, only that it was paid through 2021. She believes this is also harassment.

"It doesn't stop," Barton said. Every week, she blocks dozens of sock puppet accounts that appear as followers or commenters on her social media pages, she said. Last week, she tried to order a pizza, and her credit card was rejected because the zip code on her account was changed without her knowledge. Now the harassers are "getting into my money," she said.

Cook said her electronics have also been hacked. A document written by an AT&T technician told her in writing that a device attached to her cable could allow someone to tap into the cameras on her smart TV and computer.

Yet another true crime saga of tragic losses and vicious trolling extends to Carbondale, Colorado, where Morgan Ingram died at age 20 on December 2, 2011.

Her parents, Steve and Toni Ingram, appeared across national media following her untimely death. Morgan was aggressively stalked, and dozens of complaints were made to police four months before she was found dead in her bedroom. Although Morgan's death was ruled a suicide, her family never believed it

Initially, an autopsy report listed Morgan's cause of death as natural due to a metabolic disorder. Eight months later, the coroner changed that to suicide, Toni said, adding that Morgan had extremely high levels of the antidepressant amitriptyline in her system. But none of it added up for the Ingrams, who remain adamant that a stalker killed their daughter.

Stalker or suicide? That question has haunted Morgan Ingram's family for years. Courtesy of the Ingram family

Similar to Tanner, Morgan's case received extensive play on national media, including the Dr. Phil show. The Ingrams have never supported the claim that Morgan committed suicide, a stance that has led to plenty of backlash.

Toni said she endured threatening phone calls, her house was broken into, and that someone drilled holes through the bottom of her car's engine brackets. The vandalism almost caused the engine to fall off, she said. One time, the entire contents of her trash bin had been removed as it sat on the curb for pickup. The harassment escalated to the point where the couple moved out of state to a location that Toni said she cannot disclose.

At one point, Toni also had a restraining order filed against her for things she said, but the judge in her case refused to honor it.

"He said it wasn't the proper forum," Toni said, "but he kept it on file."

Sarah Afshar, a former Yahoo community manager and blogger from Idaho, told me she suffered extreme harassment after she posted an interview with Toni on her website. Soon after the article appeared, Afshar said a series of hateful, "disgusting" websites were built about her.

"It's disgusting what they've done to me," she said. "It's really horrible. The only thing I'm guilty of, though, is interviewing Toni."

Anonymous people came to her blog and threatened her over the interview, Afshar said. One of them wrote, "I don't want to do this to you; why are you siding with Toni?," Afshar said.

"It's like they were warning me about what they were going to do to me if I supported Toni or interviewed her," Afshar said, who believes it is "definitely a group of ladies who try to silence and intimidate others into thinking like them, and if you don't, they try to ruin your life. That's exactly what they do. They will do anything to silence you. And that's even if it means starting hate sites, spreading propaganda, or impersonating you."

Afshar said she has had to deal with "so much drama," for the interview and her opinions about how Morgan died.

"I do believe she was murdered," Afshar said.

Afshar said that as an Iranian-American woman, she treasures the ability to speak out, because many women in Iran do not have that right.

Similar to Barton, podcasters and bloggers played a role in intimidating Toni and her supporters. The website for the podcast Sword and Scale stated in a preview to one of its shows on March 19, 2014: "What happens when a family's grief slips into malice and madness, when a mother is so hell-bent on being portrayed as a victim that she begins victimizing everyone who doesn't see her as one? Welcome to the sad story of Morgan Ingram's untimely death and the circus of insanity that followed and continues to this day."

Some supporters of Morgan have pushed back just as hard, though Toni said she does not agree with everything that other activists have posted. The only official websites that Toni has devoted to her daughter are Morganingram.com, Morgansstalking.com, and Facebook.com/morgansstalking. Like the other families, Toni said she can't understand why people have tried to silence her.

"We're not supposed to be sheep and just listen to everything someone says," Toni said, adding that she discounts the opinions of bloggers and podcasters who don't have all of the information she does.

Similar to Barton, Toni was critical of the coroner's work and the police investigation into her daughter's death.

"It was not investigated as a murder," said Toni, who serves as the West Coast director of the advocacy group Families of Homicide Victims and Missing Persons. She pointed to what she called shoddy and superficial police work.

"They never took fingerprints, tested for spots or the bite mark on her arm ... [and] did not do a rape kit," Toni said. "They took her phone, a journal, and expired two-year-old medication bottles under the sink.

"They wrote all the wrong stuff down," she continued, "and they used it as gospel."

Most people don't understand the trauma and losses that go with losing a child, Toni said.

"It wasn't just one stalker," she said. "This was gangstalking. There was more than one person involved in Morgan's stalking. ... Just like our family, victims' families suffer huge losses," which can create a domino effect in other areas of life like finances and the ability to function well at work. Another drawback is looking for a job. When a would-be employer Googles you and sees the controversy, they tend to think that hiring you is probably not worth the trouble, she said.

Strangely, Toni Ingram was also accused of having Munchausen syndrome, the same mental illness that Barton was accused of having. Toni's "diagnosis" was floated by Myra Martinez, a blogger and owner of a crime scene cleanup business.

Martinez said she spoke out because she didn't think it was right for a young man to be accused by name of stalking and killing Morgan when he was never charged with anything. Martinez does not believe the alleged stalker committed any crime.

"Imagine what will happen if he meets a girl," Martinez said. "Or when he applies for a job."

Ingram, Barton, and Cook all pledge to never give up on seeking answers. Sometimes, Toni said, the best thing to do is to focus on that and not the hurtful comments of online trolls and other attackers.

"All of our families have gone through trauma," Toni said. "All we want is the truth. If the evidence is contradictory or it says the wrong thing, then we have every right to find the truth."

WILL ANYBODY STEP UP?

Families of Those Killed by LASD Describe Ongoing Harassment by Deputies as Part of a “Triple Assault”

Family members spoke of feeling unsafe and under siege during the recent Stop L.A. Sheriff Attacks forum attended by county supervisors Hilda Solis and Holly Mitchell

 John Weber, the father of Anthony "A.J." Weber, the unarmed 16-year-old who was killed by sheriff's deputies in 2018, speaks on the ongoing harassment of his family during the recent "Stop L.A. Sheriffs Attacks" forum organized by BLM-LA and Centro CSO. BLM-LA's Paula Minor moderated the second half of the forum. Interpretation was provided by Pro Bono ASL.

John Weber, the father of Anthony "A.J." Weber, the unarmed 16-year-old who was killed by sheriff's deputies in 2018, speaks on the ongoing harassment of his family during the recent "Stop L.A. Sheriffs Attacks" forum organized by BLM-LA and Centro CSO. BLM-LA's Paula Minor moderated the second half of the forum. Interpretation was provided by Pro Bono ASL.

In a March 27 forum organized by Black Lives Matter-L.A. (BLM-LA) and Centro CSO, County Supervisors Hilda Solis (District 1) and Holly Mitchell (District 2) heard from families whose loved ones had been killed by deputies from the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department (LASD). Over the course of two and a half hours, family members described how the pain associated with their loss had been compounded by what they described as ongoing harassment and intimidation by the sheriffs.

The intimidation was part of what Dr. Melina Abdullah, co-founder of BLM-LA, labeled a “triple assault” on the community. Not only had these families experienced the “theft of the body” (the loss of their family member), she said, but they had also had to witness the assassination of their loved one's character as officials worked to justify the killing. Finally, the criminalization of the families, she said – “the harassment, the trauma, the terrorism that is exacted upon [those] who dare to speak on behalf of their stolen loved ones but also on behalf of the communities that they seek to protect from further police violence” – had worked to stripped them of safe havens.

 Screen Shot 2021-03-29 at 9.36.30 PM

Valerie Vargas (above, left), aunt of Anthony Vargas – the 21-year-old shot in the back and head 13 times in 2018 when alleged prospective members of the Banditos deputy gang mistook him for a robbery suspect and tried to detain him – apologized in advance for any anger listeners might hear in her voice.

The consistent retaliation her family had experienced since Anthony's killing, she said, made them “feel like we're trapped with nowhere to go.”

The more they spoke out about the inconsistencies in the deputies' stories regarding what led to Anthony's shooting and how it went down, the more encounters they seemed to have with LASD. On multiple occasions, members of the family had been followed or pulled over and forced to sit in the back of a patrol car long enough to make them late for work. Vargas herself said she had been followed by deputies from East L.A. all the way to her job in South L.A. And instead of backing off after the airing of a CBS investigation into the deputy gangs (which the Vargas family participated in, below, and here), five units had shown up across the street from Stephanie Luna's home (also an aunt of Anthony, at right, above) while family members were participating in a Clubhouse conversation with the ACLU. Among the responding deputies was Jonathan Rojas, one of the two deputies involved in Anthony's death.

Having to fight so hard for justice had robbed them of time to grieve, said Vargas. And the constant presence of deputies in their space – including commenting on their social media posts about Anthony – was asphyxiating. “We feel like we have no sense of security walking or driving in the streets that we grew up in...the streets we raised Anthony in,” she said. Feeling like they had to document it all just in case something happened to them had only added to their sense of paranoia.

Meanwhile, deputy Nikolis Perez, who would go on to kill 25-year-old Jorge Serrano just a few months after killing Anthony, has since been promoted to the rank of training deputy.

“We're not living our lives to live any more,” Vargas concluded before turning to Solis and Mitchell and asking, “What can you do to protect families?”

Vargas wasn't the only one pleading for more tangible changes in policy and practice. Those echoing her concerns offered up their own traumatic experiences, speaking to the myriad ways harassment had worked to steal their peace and why it was so urgent that there be real change.

Chiquita Twyman, the sister of Ryan Twyman, said the killing of her brother – the unarmed 24-year-old father of three that deputies fired 34 rounds at in June of 2019 while they were supposedly executing an arrest warrant – was an outgrowth of the harassment he had endured for years as a young Black man coming up in Compton.

Ryan and Daimon Leffall had been sitting in Ryan's vehicle in a residential parking lot when deputies approached with their guns already drawn. Then one of the deputies opened the back passenger side door, opening fire at him when Ryan panicked and tried to drive away.

The opening of the car door was the kind of invasive, deliberate escalation that mirrored the way deputies regularly harass folks in the community during investigative stops, as seen below, in the assault of Jesus Medina in Lynwood last year...

...and in one recorded by Ryan's friend, rapper 1TakeTeezy (below), the same month Ryan was killed.

Teezy had been sitting in front of his residence when deputies pulled up and immediately began reaching inside his vehicle. Aware of his rights, he refused to get out of the car, even after deputies took his license and told him they wouldn't give it back unless he got out.

Teezy later told Next Wave Up radio (below, at 8:06) that after threatening to run the plates of every car in front of his residence, the deputies got fed up and threw his license in the street.

Prior to harassing him, he said they had been hopping out on people up the street for no reason. It was why he started recording – he knew he was next. Dayreezyy (of NWU radio, in the green hoodie) concurred, saying the sheriffs were worse than gang members – aggressively demanding to know where you were going and what you were doing in certain neighborhoods without having a reason to engage you.

“Most of the time I get pulled over, the question ain’t even ‘license or registration,’” says Teezy. “It’s ‘Can you get out of the car?’...and ‘Let us search your shit.’”

It was entirely likely, in other words, that Ryan had not been informed they were trying to serve a warrant on him, if that was in fact what deputies were doing.

“They’s just so comfortable at opening your door up,” Teezy says below. If deputies had just followed proper procedure, he speculated, Ryan might still be alive.

The violent way in which deputies engage people creates situations where they feel entitled to shoot folks – effectively because they know they can later claim they felt threatened.

And now that aggressive kind of harassment has been transferred onto Ryan’s surviving family members, according to his sister, putting at them greater risk for also being seen as a threat in need of neutralization.

Deputies drive up and down past her aunt’s home on 134th, they threaten to ticket the cars in front of her aunt’s driveway even though she owns that property, and they make obscene gestures at her and other family members. Similar to what Vargas recounted, Twyman said her family was also regularly followed by deputies. They have been pulled over, put in the back of patrol cars while deputies searched through their vehicles, and released with no ticket after being told, “Oh, we know who you are; [we] know who you’re related to,” she explained.

“I’m overwhelmed with how we are treated when we’re the ones who lost a loved one,” Twyman said of deputies showing up at Ryan’s funeral, at his memorial services, and even at a birthday celebration in his memory. Meanwhile, two and a half years on, the family doesn’t even know the names of the deputies that killed him.

“Can we at least have that much respect?” she asked.

 Screen Shot 2021-04-07 at 1.58.19 PM

John Weber, the father of Anthony “A.J.” Weber – the unarmed sixteen-year-old killed in Westmont in 2018 after deputies presumed him to be the man brandishing a weapon that they had gotten a call about – said deputies have searched his family’s home multiple times since A.J.’s death. Deputies also lurk around his recycling business, intimidating potential customers and harassing another of his sons that works there, he said. And they regularly pull his children over and make them get out of the car at gunpoint.

They “do it over and over again – they don’t stop” because they know that the families are powerless, he said. There is nothing the families can do to push back that won’t invite more retaliation.

LASD has effectively proven that by harassing them at home, despite it being just outside of LASD jurisdiction, and by getting LAPD in on the act. See footage below of the phalanx of LAPD officers that showed up to search the Weber home. The first time they came, it was to look for security footage of a possible murder suspect in the neighborhood. The second time, a year later, it was to look for a man with a gun they said might be hiding inside, though officers let an elderly, bedridden member of the family remain in bed (and presumably in the line of fire) while they searched for this potentially armed and dangerous person.

There was no man to be found, and none of the surrounding homes were searched. Instead, LAPD had the family's cars towed from the back alley.

The testimony of Jamie Kizzee, cousin of 29-year-old Dijon Kizzee – killed in Westmont last August after deputies spotted him on his bicycle and chased him down to conduct an investigative stop – also spoke to LASD's influence on other departments. Just three months after Dijon was killed, Kizzee said, instead of two probation officers showing up at her door to perform the same house check they'd performed for two years for her son, they rolled up ten deep. One officer tried covering her doorbell camera, while others were seen with their hands on their pepper spray canisters or service weapons. "I wonder which hand he's gonna use when my son open that door," she said of her fears officers would immediately assault the young man.

Then she heard one of the officers loudly announce that they had cameras – something that indicated they were prepared to be met with violence of some form from the family.

She grew so concerned that she instructed her son not to open that door – despite knowing that such a decision could open him up to more harassment and penalization, if officers were to declare he was in violation of his probation.

She has it all on camera, she said. But what has changed in the intervening months?

 Screen Shot 2021-03-27 at 1.41.59 PM

For Khadijah Shabazz, who said she first heard the chant, "I Can't Breathe" after LAPD hogtied Tracy Mayberry and beat him to death in 1991, and whose son, Dana Malik Young, was gunned down by LASD at the end of a chase last October, the answer was "very little."

She was exhausted from being subjected to the "triple assaults" Abdullah spoke of for over 30 years. "I don't have another life to give. I don't have any more breaths to take. I don't have any more hashtags. I don't have any more energy to be marching with my fist up in the air [only] to come back to the same thing," she declared. "Right now, it needs to be all broken down, torn down, and started all over again."

Just electing another sheriff changes little if the policies that allowed for these abuses to endure are not addressed, she said.

 Screen Shot 2021-04-02 at 1.18.42 PM

Still, for the families who have so often felt alone in their struggle for justice, the participation of supervisors Solis and Mitchell – and the frank language with which both women have consistently called out the bias and brutality that characterizes the history of policing in their East and South L.A. communities – was welcome.

Sadly, as Abdullah noted, even just hearing the supervisors repeating the names of those lost out loud was meaningful. “One of the things that we’ve seen as the lives of our people are stolen is they become hashtags and statistics,” she said. “Very rarely do elected officials actually say their names and acknowledge their lives.”

 Screen Shot 2021-03-29 at 10.26.12 PM

Addressing the impunity with which LASD has operated, however, will require so much more. As the sheriff is an elected official, it is difficult for other electeds to intervene, even when the need has long been clear.

It took over two decades of the ACLU monitoring of the jails and thousands upon thousands of complaints from both those abused by deputies and witnesses to the horrific abuse and cover ups for federal officials to launch an investigation into LASD in 2010. And true to form, once LASD leadership was made aware of that investigation – when an inmate-turned-informant for the FBI was caught with a cellphone in 2011 – sheriff’s officials decided moving him from place to place and changing his name to hide him was the best course of action. Though then-Sheriff Lee Baca and former Undersheriff Paul Tanaka were eventually convicted of obstruction of justice (Tanaka was also convicted of conspiracy), abuses within the jails remain rampant and the deputy gangs that perpetuate that corruption remain intact.

Last year, after Compton Mayor Aja Brown was pulled over under false pretenses, ordered out of her car, and searched for drugs and weapons while her husband and infant daughter watched, she openly called for the Attorney General to launch an investigation into both the Compton station and the Executioner’s deputy gang there. She minced no words, saying they had terrorized the community for too long and had always managed to cover their tracks. Outgoing Attorney General Xavier Becerra finally did open a civil rights investigation earlier this year, but it is described broadly as looking at the constitutionality of LASD’s policing and is not specific to a station or the issue of deputy gangs.

More recently, it took the combination of a California Supreme Court ruling, a new law aimed at police transparency, and a lawsuit from the Los Angeles Times for the public to begin to get a glimpse into why 300 deputies are listed as having a history of misconduct that could damage their credibility in court.

The sheriffs also have a half-century-long tradition of intimidating their own into silence via at least eighteen deeply entrenched deputy gangs found throughout the county, including in the jails. In addition to creating a hostile environment for their colleagues – see the recent lawsuit levied by eight deputies naming two commanders, three captains, two lieutenants and 45 total deputies – the gangs’ presence, “foster[s] a culture that resists police reforms, such as community policing and constitutional policing, by encouraging and even celebrating aggressive tactics and excessive use of force against minority communities,” according to a report by the Center for Juvenile Law & Policy at Loyola Marymount. See also [Cerise Castle’s excellent series at Knock L.A. detailing the violent history of those gangs and the punishments exacted upon the communities they are supposed to serve. See the essential database of deputy gang members Castle compiled here.]

For his part, Sheriff Alex Villanueva has denied deputy gangs control any station. In the wake of the announcement of an investigation into the department, he even went so far as to post a recorded statement from what appears to be an alternate universe, where he encourages deputies to avoid joining gangs because “we want to better align ourselves with the public’s expectations.” He also goes on to say he’s never seen groups of three or more officers doing anything other than being social, and argues lots of people have tattoos and join groups for fun.

For her part, Solis said the issue of deputy gangs – and particularly the activities of the Banditos, the gang operating out of the East L.A. station – was one of the first to cross her desk when she took office in 2014. It was also one of the reasons why she, together with then-supervisor Mark Ridley-Thomas, had authored the December 2014 motion that led to the creation of the Civilian Oversight Commission \(COC\).

But as Solis acknowledged, institutionalizing justice takes real time and effort. The first set of COC commissioners would not take their seats until the end of 2016. Since then, they’ve battled openly with Villanueva, who has repeatedly thwarted their efforts to hold him accountable for a range of issues.

Even after the passage of Measure R last year, which purported to give the oversight commission subpoena power, Villanueva has repeatedly flouted their requests.

He has also gone on the offensive. He opened a criminal investigation into Inspector General Max Huntsman in 2019 after Hunstman’s office obtained internal documents (including personnel files for a problematic deputy that Villanueva had rehired) that LASD had refused to hand over. And he harassed former L.A. County chief executive Sachi Hamai, publicly claiming she had denied first responders paid sick leave in a pandemic – a false allegation that resulted in her being targeted with threats.

He has also publicly lambasted both Solis and Mitchell for calling out the brutalization of people of color by sheriff’s deputies. During a live broadcast on social media, he called Solis “la Malinche,” a slur meant to malign her as a “traitor” or “sell out,” in the wake of concerns raised about the killing of 18-year-old Andrés Guardado (shot five times in the back as he knelt on the ground) and the involved deputies’ alleged ties to the Compton Executioners gang. A few months later, he tweeted taunts at Mitchell, suggesting she was ignorant for referring to law enforcement as “the men and women of blue” when the then-state senator said she hoped the COC’s decision to explore ways to remove him from office would send a signal that there was a deep concern about how he was managing the department.

Those personal attacks seem only to have made both Solis and Mitchell more resolute in their determination to speak truth to power in this case.

“The sheriff’s department we know is a violent organization in many ways – retaliation, harassment, I’ve heard it time and time again,” said Solis. And “we have someone at the helm there that doesn’t have respect and is, in my opinion, part of the problem...He’s taken his authority and abused it.”

Referencing the arguments made by some of the family members, Mitchell was no less blunt, lamenting the extent to which the tax dollars of Black and brown people essentially go to funding services that both make them feel unsafe and are actively wielded against them. "We want to stop being murdered," she said. "I don't want a Sheriff's Department riddled with white supremacist ideology and people who have a true gang mentality" and who prioritize protecting their own to such a degree that they "feel that...they are above the law."

As state senator and budget chair, she said, she had previously voted to fund various forms of training for officers. But the time had come to acknowledge that "we can't train racism out of people." She now wanted to see more effort put into screening those seeking to go into policing in the first place. She said she also wanted to see more resources directed at strengthening social safety net infrastructure, including investments in alternative responders, services, and unarmed "empathetic, culturally competent people" that could be called upon in crises.

Solis concurred, saying she wanted to see more services for the families. She also said she hoped to work more closely with the advocacy groups that were getting the message out there about these human rights abuses.

Given the limited power the board of supervisors had over the sheriff, she said, it was imperative that they all work together to leverage their voices where they could. Whether it was continuing to educate the public about these abuses, working with the D.A.'s office, empowering and supporting advocacy groups, or attempting to work through the legislature to build in oversight mechanisms, both said, there was much work to be done to exact real change.

But both pledged their commitment to the long road ahead. After thanking the families and acknowledging their frustration at not having been heard for so long, Mitchell said, "Don't give up on me. Don't give up on the process. And please know that I'm not gonna give up either."

We were unfortunately unable to fit in all of the families' stories above. Please find a recording of the full forum below.

Public Notice

The California Highway Patrol (CHP) is pursuing reaccreditation from the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies, Inc. (CALEA), an internationally recognized nonprofit organization dedicated to improving law enforcement and public safety services.

Due to COVID-19, the CHP will undergo a virtual assessment by the CALEA. During June 29, 2020, through July 1, 2020, the CHP will be assessed by a team of CALEA assessors who will evaluate the Department's law enforcement, training Academy, and communications programs. Accreditation programs administered by CALEA require agencies to comply with standards in four basic areas: policy and procedures, administration, operations, and support services.

As a part of the on-site assessment, members of the public are invited to participate in a public information call-in session with the CHP. The public may offer comments by calling (916) 843-4398 on Tuesday June 30, 2020, between the hours of 9:00 a.m. and 11:00 a.m. Telephone comments will be limited to 2 minutes. Comments will be taken by CALEA assessors. The public information call-in session provides a venue for members of the public to interact with the assessors, ask questions about the accreditation process, or comment on the Department's compliance with accreditation standards.

A virtual public hearing is scheduled via Webex on Tuesday, June 30, 2020, beginning at 1:00 p.m.

How to Testify at the Virtual Public Hearing:

To provide public testimony via oral communication or to have your comments read into the public record, please e-mail the following information to CHP-Accreditation@chp.ca.gov no later than Thursday, June 25, 2020, at 5:00 p.m. Please note "CALEA Public Comments" in the subject line of the email.

- First and last name
- E-Mail address
- Telephone number including area code
- Street address
- How you will provide your testimony?
 - Online via Webex.
 - Read my comments into the public record.
- Topic/subject you will discuss.

In order to provide your public testimony, you must be logged into the Webex meeting online or by telephone at the start of the meeting. Please be prepared to provide your testimony at any time during the public hearing. When it is time for you to provide public testimony, your name will be called, and your telephone/microphone will be unmuted by the facilitator. Prior to providing your testimony, please state your name for the record. You are encouraged to speak from a prepared statement to ensure the best use of the 2-minute time limit. If a registered speaker is not available at the time they are called, the facilitator will call the next person in line.

Anyone wishing to submit written comments regarding the CHP's accreditation status may send their comments to: CALEA, 13575 Heathcote Boulevard, Suite 320, Gainesville, Virginia 20155, or contact CALEA via their website at www.calea.org. A link to an overview of CALEA standards is available on the CHP Web Site at www.chp.ca.gov/calea. The accreditation manager for the CHP is Lieutenant Pablo Reyna.
